Original publisher: Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala. : Air University Press, 1999 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)54899030 Subject: Bombers -- Great Britain. Excerpt: . . . Chapter 1 No. 3 Wing Royal Naval Air Service (July 1916-May 1917) Any study of British long-range bombing campaigns against Germany logically commences with the operations of No. 3 Naval Wing from its bases at Luxeuil and Ochey in France. Between July 1916 and April 1917, this Royal Naval Air Service (RNAS) unit launched 18 raids into Germany and German-occupied territory. The average formation (15 Sopwith 1 S strutter aircraft) dropped an average of 2,500 pounds of bombs per mission. By October 1916, No. 3 Wing had proved able to cooperate effectively with French air forces in a series of aerial attacks against German iron works and blast furnaces in the Saar valley, where the British Admiralty believed 2 steel for U-boats was being produced. Yet, No. 3 Wing never realized more than half its proposed strength of one hundred machines. Examining the plans and operations of No. 3 Naval Wing during its short career...
